

MASSACHUSETTS PLOUGHMAN AND NEW ENGLAND JOURNAL OF AGRICULTURE, -- BOSTON, SATURDAY, APRIL 17, 1880.

a dignified Cabinet officer, Gen. Jackson grasped the bridle of the refractory colts with an iron grip, and after a severe tussle with him came off as unbroken victor and compelled the colt to stand quiet till all things were ready; the trial took place and was much enjoyed by the company. This story illustrates the determination of the men and shows that he could not only whip a trained army of British troopers with a hand of raw recruits, so as speak, as he did at that ever memorable battle of New Orleans, but that he could also subdue an unruly horse which two other men utterly failed to do.

Gen. Jackson is looked upon as one of the pioneers of the South in Tennessee; a man who did much to advance the breeding of thoroughbred horses, an industry which has brought large sums of money to the State.

Pascalis founded a family of horses noted for their speed, game and endurance, not only on the race-course, but also for long journeys and the trials of the trail.

General himself was always mounted on a superb gray, and his tall commanding figure showed to much advantage in the saddle; he was a most accomplished horseman.

The prominent men of Tennessee, an eminent member of the legal profession, a member of Congress, and later United States Minister to Brazil, died in 1850, at the age of 60.

MALARIA DESTROYED.
G. J. Godfrey, of Brockville, Canada, certifies that he was prostrated by a malarial disease for three years, and was cured by the use of Wm. Warner's Safe Pills, entirely cured. His wife - I shall never forget her as a part of my outfit."

SHERWERS AND ABILITY.
Hop Bitters, so freely advertised in all the papers, and so rampant, are having a large sale. They are not the virtues of the Hop Tree, and the proprietors of these Bitters have given up their business. Those virtues are now given up, whose virtues are no palpable even to one's observation.—Exchange.

Dr. KENNETH'S PRATICE. Weed is warned to cover every crook from the worst Country to the slightest crevice in the earth. This is the secret in over six hundred acres under my own eyes. It acts first on the stomach, then the appetite, cleanses the blood, quiets the nerves. It stops bleeding of the Lungs and Irritation of the Throat. It cures Indigestion and Whooping Cough, and many other diseases. I want to know what it will do, because it is weaker than any other cough medicine I ever used. It never upsets the stomach. It is a Water of our own land, and not used in any prescription. I have carefully watched its effects on all ages from infant to old age. Sold at all drugstores at one dollar a bottle. Made by Dr. Kenneth, Roxbury, Mass.

The Poet's Corner.

THE MAXIMS OF THE WORLD.

BY JOSEPHINE POLLARD.

"Be honest," says the crafty man,
"It is the most expedient plan.
The best advice you can get
If you are not a good
Fair dealing, you will have reward
For your integrity."

"No need that benefits should room,
For charity begins at home."
And there she should be found;
Nor was a goddess.
Nor let her circles wide out
Beyond the world's bound."

"Business is business," says the man
In his own narrow place.
Who squires, grasps, and slaves,
And plunders his selfish end,
He grieves to his nearest friend.
The penit is the sinner.

Let disappointment and distress
Upon a brother sorely press,
His present misery,
It would not speak true,
His misery is taught to you;
"Look out for number one!"

Oh, yes, with bannisters all unfurled,
That bear the maxims of the world,
How foolish is your plan!
The soul thus dwarfed by greed of gain
And selfishness, can't ever attain
The status of a man.

He honest, good, true, because
You are the other God's own laws
Whence the sacrifice;
And let your banners be unfurled,
Bearing no maxims of the world,
But only love's device.

COURTSHIP BY PROXY.

"Indeed," said the deacon's wife, I know by that she hadn't heard a word.

"Well, yes," I repeated, a good deal disengaged; "for I saw it must begin again at the very beginning: 'she is more than a hundred years old, and entirely destitute. Yet she now complies with anything I say.'"

The old woman was in Kentuck, but somehow strayed up here, and now has outlined everybody that ever belonged to her. If I could manage to get her in my house, I would be safe. But as she isn't a resident of the city, it will be necessary to have her board and lodgings."

"Courtship by proxy is the best thing to do," replied Mrs. Deacon, waking up a little. "Still I don't know what we can do until we have called a meeting of the society."

That was much like her! If the vestry had been on fire she would have stopped to call a meeting of the society before she would have run over to dipper of water.

"But I have no time to be a fool, I am starved," said I, impatiently. "Can't I, as president of the society empower me to give her at least one of those woolsacks we have?"

"I don't know but I might go as far as that, though I suppose it isn't exactly in order," returned the deacon's wife, leaning back in her chair, and smiling at the deacon's son for my injustice. "He is a man and a woman, and a generous man, I've always heard."

The deacon's wife looked puzzled.

"Oh! your old colored woman!" said she, shrugging her shoulders. "I suppose she was thinking of you. Mr. Brodhead has a very high opinion of you, Bella. Did you know it?"

"What do you mean, Mrs. Shakelford?" said I, surprised, as though the man in the mood would think for me, my friends all knew how I detested such talk. And besides, I never considered Mrs. Shakelford that much, and I have not been usually interested in the sewing society and flower garden.

But for once some other idea had taken possession of her mind, and as her thoughts always ran away, she never could have more than a tinge at a time.

"Mr. Brodhead is a nice man, and a fine-looking man," she said, looking at me sharply. "I have no means, and a generous man, he has a manly laugh."

"I suppose so," I replied, gathering my shawl about me.

"Oh! I don't go to get bella. I was wandering about you, and I consider your dropping in quite providential. The deacon and I were talking of calling on you this evening," said the deacon's wife, putting her hands behind her head. "I am in at the gate, I said to myself that's as token a mark of respect as I can get from the other on my shoulder. I haven't the gold embroidery and beads to do with, but I have all the rest," she added, smiling nervously.

Just now the deacon came in. Nowhere is in the opinion of his wife but that why Deacon Shakelford didn't make the world. He found it already made. And when he came in he looked up to him as though he had come, and she could safely drop the beads on his shoulders, and have a man say when he had made such a noise.

"I have no objection to an offer of service," said Mr. Brodhead.

"There! I shouldn't wonder if he would give us something handsome!" I exclaimed, going down on my knees in my heart to the deacon's son for my injustice. "He is a man and a woman, and a generous man, I've always heard."

The deacon's wife said nothing.

"What do you think of Mr. Brodhead?" said I, surprised, as though the man in the mood would think for me, my friends all knew how I detested such talk. And besides, I never considered Mrs. Shakelford that much, and I have not been usually interested in the sewing society and flower garden.

But for once some other idea had taken possession of her mind, and as her thoughts always ran away, she never could have more than a tinge at a time.

"Mr. Brodhead is well enough," Mrs. Shakelford said, "but I don't know if the idea of making a proposal of this sort through 'middle men'! It is too absurd!"

I said laughing, and put on my hat.

"He is a very bashful man, Mr. Brodhead is, Bella, and so he got us to help him a little. Why he is in love with you," he interposed, smiling. "I am in love with you, I am in love with you to the bone!"

"Let it run out of his teeth," said I, beginning to feel like new yeast.

"I have no objection to anything that's as token a mark of respect as I can get from the other on my shoulder. I have all the rest," she added, smiling nervously.

"I have no objection to an offer of service," said Mr. Brodhead.

"I know it was, Mr. Corlies," pursued Gittery, who had been waiting outside the door and discovered the figures of our minister and his wife. "I can tell as far off as I can hear it. Did you ever notice his eyes?" she continued. "They look like two bright stars, and when he holds his head just like Deacon Shakelford's old white horse."

And then she disappeared into the kitchen, with her ermine and the cat, while Aunt Susannah was in her room, and I, after a rod of pine (in the form of a switch).

As Gitty had no home, no money, and only one foot of her own, but as good as four ears and two tongues, it might seem reasonable that the economists were sated. However, things are not what they seem.

And then she disappeared into the kitchen, with her ermine and the cat, while Aunt Susannah was in her room, and I, after a rod of pine (in the form of a switch).

As Gitty had no home, no money, and only one foot of her own, but as good as four ears and two tongues, it might seem reasonable that the economists were sated. However, things are not what they seem.

"I know it was, Mr. Corlies," pursued Gittery, who had been waiting outside the door and discovered the figures of our minister and his wife. "I can tell as far off as I can hear it. Did you ever notice his eyes?" she continued. "They look like two bright stars, and when he holds his head just like Deacon Shakelford's old white horse."
